PREFACE.

THERE are several Anglo-Hindustáni dictionaries. But none such exists, at present, as is indicated in the Title-page to this Work. D'Rozario's Dictionary makes the nearest approach to it. Yet D'Rozario's, with all its merits, is far behind the age. It is meagre and defective : meagre, because the number of words it gives is very limited ; defective, because syllabication, pronunciation, and etymology—three of the most important elements of a good lexicon—do not enter into its plan. Besides, it is out of print. That there is need of a better and more comprehensive Anglo-Hindustáni dictionary than any one now procurable in the market, few will deny. The establishment of the Indian Universities has opened a new era in the literary history of the Empire. The exclusion of all pleaders ignorant of English from the bar of the High Courts has also acted like electricity. Natives have now been roused from their lethargy. They have learnt from experience duly to appreciate English. They now view it as the only portal to distinction and wealth. The avidity with which English will, hence, be studied not only in Schools, but also at home, all over the country, will be inconceivably great. But, without adequate aids, students will be in no better state than sailors venturing on the pathless sea without a compass, or men trying to build without building materials. Influenced by these and similar considerations, the Printer and Publisher, Dr. E. J. Lazarus, of Benares, suggested to me the expediency of making an attempt to meet the wants of the rising generation. The suggestion had my warmest sympathy. I readily yielded to his wishes. I did not then know my own weakness, nor, indeed, the heavy responsibilities of the task, as experience has since taught me them. I forthwith began. The preparation of a fresh Dictionary, so far as the English portion was concerned, seemed to me to be a work of mere supererogation. Several dictionaries were in existence which might with more or less propriety form the basis of my work. It was only necessary to make a judicious selection of one for use. And I selected Dr. Reid's 'Dictionary of the English Language' for my text-book, as best answering our design. His arrangement of words, perhaps in imitation of Dr. Richardson and Mr. Smart, appears to be exact and philosophical. All the words of the same family are alphabetically arranged under the leading one. As regards the general plan and execution of his work, I let Dr. Reid speak for himself. The following are the rules he laid down for his own guidance.

First, To insert no word which has not been sanctioned by the use of some eminent author, or which has become obsolete; secondly, To give the Spelling and Pronunciation which are supported by the greatest number of competent authorities; thirdly, To denote what appears to be the Root of every word; and, fourthly, To define and explain the words as they are generally employed by the standard writers of the English language.

He further explains himself at large thus:—

In the spelling of words, the Compiler has taken as his guide the prevailing usage of the principal lexicographers. A more uniform system might have been introduced by adopting certain general rules, according to which particular classes of words might have been spelled. But every such rule would have led to greater changes in the usual practice than the Compiler felt himself authorized to make. Instead of aiming at uniformity, therefore, he has preferred that mode of spelling each word which he found to be supported by the greatest number of authorities.

He has pursued a similar plan in the pronunciation of words. Generally, the system of Walker has been adopted, as being most in accordance with the usage of the educated portion of society; but the Compiler has not hesitated to depart from it, whenever he found it at variance either with the majority of authorities, or with general practice.

In the mode of indicating pronunciation, however, the present Work differs, in various respects, from that of Walker. In the first place, marks have been preferred to figures, as being equally precise and less perplexing. In the second place, the pronunciation is indicated only by the marks and the ordinary sounds of the letters, no attempt being made to render the pronunciation more plain by a different mode of spelling; except in peculiar words, and in such as are pronounced in two different ways, one of which ways is generally indicated by marks, and the other by spelling the word as it is pronounced. In the third place, marks are placed only above the vowels in syllables which have the primary or secondary accent, most of the others being pronounced so obscurely that the sound cannot be exactly indicated.

The most satisfactory way of giving the derivation of words, would have been to have taken the most remote root, and traced it, through all its changes, into English. But this was not practicable in a work of limited extent like the present; and, for want of space, the Compiler was forced to adopt a mode of derivation which, while it is sufficient to show the origin of words, at the same time saves all avoidable repetition both of the roots and of their signification. Instead of giving its root after each English word, he has collected into families or groups all words which are derived from the same root, and which begin with the same syllable and have affinity in signification as well as in etymology, placing first, in large letters, what may be called the head of the family or group, and arranging under it, in smaller type, the other derivatives, in alphabetical order. In like manner, instead of explaining each root as it occurs in the body of the Work, he has collected the principal roots into a Vocabulary, in which he has given their signification, and, as examples of their derivatives, the head or first word of every group in the Dictionary.

On this division of the Work, it may be necessary to explain, that when an English word is, in form and signification, the same as its root, the latter is not printed, but only the language to which it belongs is indicated; that, when the root is thus in the same form as the English derivative, and also when the form is different, but the signification the same, the root has not been inserted in the Vocabulary; that roots are not placed after words for which no probable derivation has been assigned; that all doubtful roots are denoted by a point of interrogation; that a few Latin words not purely classical, and some obsolete French words, will be found among the roots; that the roots in the Dictionary, and the radical parts of the words in the Vocabulary, are printed in italics; that, in Greek words, the grave accent on e final (è) indicates that it is not silent, as in English; that, in the Vocabulary, η and ω are generally represented by ē and ō; and that the quantity has been marked in all Greek and Latin words in which errors in pronunciation were likely to occur.

The most philosophical mode of explaining words would have been to have given first their primary signification, as indicated by their derivation, and afterwards, in the order of their connexion with it, all their secondary meanings. But in this, as in derivation, the Compiler has been restricted by want of room; and he has been under the necessity of confining himself to those acceptations which words most commonly bear in speech and writing. It thus not unfrequently happens, that the primary meanings of words have been omitted, because they are not in use, and that secondary meanings are attached to them, which appear to have no connexion with their derivation. Such explanations and definitions as he has given, however, the Compiler has endeavoured to make as perspicuous, and, at the same time, as concise as possible; and he trusts that they will be found sufficient to convey the ordinary acceptations of all the authorized words in the English language.

In every department of the Work, the Compiler is aware that it is chargeable with many faults of both plan and execution. He nevertheless hopes that, as a school-book, it will be found superior to any dictionary at present in use. Nothing has been inserted without authority, and every word has been verified. As has been already stated, the Compiler has not, in any case, deferred merely to his own opinion, but has throughout proceeded on the principle of being guided by the majority of competent authorities. Of course he has exercised his own judgment in deciding what authorities he considered competent; but he is confident that his judgment will be ratified by that of the public, when he adds, that the lexicographers whom he has chiefly followed are, for the authenticity, spelling, derivation, and explanation of words, Johnson, Todd, Richardson, and Webster; for pronunciation, Walker, Jones, Perry, Fulton, Worcester, and Smart, and for Anglo-Saxon roots, Bosworth.

The preceding extracts expound Dr. Reid's principles. I wish it to be understood that though I have followed Dr. Reid in the English part, yet I have by no means been his servile follower. I have not hesitated to deviate from him in pronunciation or explanation, where deviation seemed needful. I have, likewise, made considerable omissions and additions of words. By the advice of a competent judge, I have rejected numerous compounds of un, the meaning, in each case, being easily deducible from the prefix and the affix. Etymology alone has not been meddled with. At present, it is not on so secure grounds as desirable. I think I am not under a wrong impression, when I say that first-rate lexicographers are only tyros in this department. They all trace a word only to its Greek, Latin, or Gothic form. They think there is no room left for more remote derivation. But the recent discoveries in the Science of Language have opened vast regions yet untrodden by them. Sanskrit, the 'Language of languages,' has been proved to be an elder sister of all the known Aryan languages. Thus, so long as Sanskrit is ignored, so long will etymology be necessarily false. A fair start has, however, been made in this subject by English as well as European Continental scholars. We have reasons to hope that, ere long, the deficiency will be supplied. But till it is, we must be contented with the teaching of our present teachers.

With some exceptions in the beginning of the Work, each English meaning of a word—and perhaps a word sometimes happens to bear a dozen meanings—has been represented, in due order, in the Vernaculars either by one equivalent or more than one. This required immense labour. The order of the meanings in the text-book was to be scrupulously observed, and each to be as faithfully explained. But the single English meanings given in a School dictionary like Dr. Reid's, though they might flash through the mind of an English gentleman in their perfect significance at the very first sight, yet do not convey their full force to a foreigner. They, in an isolated form, appear to him dim and hazy. I had, therefore, recourse to the larger dictionaries by Dr. Webster and Dr. Worcester. I carefully went through them in my progress, and thus learnt the precise import of a term from its illustrations, applications, or fuller explanation.

Sanskrit words are given rather profusely in this Work both by choice and necessity : by choice, in order to make it generally useful—that students in the sister Presidencies too might occasionally refer to it without disappointment ; by necessity, because the Hindī Vocabulary is rather poor. Visible objects and some of the ordinary mental affections have, indeed, representatives in Hindī. But the expression of the nobler sentiments and finer sensibilities of a busy mind, and of philosophic and scientific truths, is far beyond its genius and capability. Like a child in the hour of need, it must naturally resort to its parent—the Sanskrit—for help. By Sanskrit, it must be fed and nourished. It needs no foreign aid. Yet we sometimes see foreign aid forced upon it. Arabic, Persian, and Urdū words and phrases are arrayed by its side in battalions to support, as it is said, its cause. But its officious and unwelcome supporters forget that a nation which relies on mercenaries only walks on a quicksand, or leans on a broken staff. What should we say of a merchant, who having sufficient funds on hand borrowed money largely on high interest ? I do not mean that Sanskrit terms should be diffusely used in Hindī composition. Far from it. The easiest common Hindī should be employed, wherever it will suffice. But when its resources fail, preference should decidedly be given to Sanskrit over a foreign tongue. There may be instances in which the reverse will hold good. But these instances must form the exception, not the rule. In cases in which the stores of Hindī would answer well, exotic words should not be used in writings professedly Hindī. With every regard for those that differ from me, I aver that their favourite jargon—by no better name can I call their language—the farrago of Arabic, Persian, Urdū, Sanskrit and Hindí—serves, at best, only to provoke a contemptuous smile in men of taste. But some would perhaps kill Hindí. They think it is dismissed from good society, and is, therefore, synonymous with rusticity,—that it leads to no practical good, hence it must needs be discouraged. They should bear in mind that Hindí has retired from the Court and from general society by the force of circumstances. The encroachments of Persian and Urdú have proved too much for it. Its case is analogous to that of English immediately after the Norman conquest. The language of the Conquerors became the language of Law and, likewise, of Society, to a very large extent. But though Hindí, like a modest maid, has withdrawn from the public gaze in towns and cities, yet it has ever been present around our hearths, and amid our family circles. Our mothers and sisters, our wives and daughters, exchange ideas only in genuine forms of Hindí. Gentlemen in the highest walks of life, while in the public hall of audience, do hold converse in elegant Urdú. But when they are by themselves, with their dependents, or among their female relations, the scene is changed. Good home-bred expressions of Hindí then almost exclusively escape their lips or charm their ears. I now ask, Why should Hindí spoken at home by the greatest and the most learned be decried as barbarous? Again, on the ground of utility too, Hindí merits encouragement. Beyond the pale of Law, Hindí is found more useful than Urdú. In ordinary life, the former is more serviceable to Hindús than the latter. It is needed in the pettiest grocer's shop as well as in the most respectable firm. In the rural districts, its use is very general. It does not, indeed, help us to good situations. But that does not warrant us in desiring its extinction. There are far higher ends to be served. The character of the mass of the people is to be raised. They must be taught to read and write—must be made to learn the truths of the West:—not in the language of those by whom they were ill-treated, abused, and oppressed for successive generations, but in the genial speech of their ancestors, which is their invaluable inheritance. National education must be conducted through the proper vernacular, if we desire success. I suspect the unfavourable impression in certain quarters concerning Hindí is somewhat caused by the diversity of its nature. It does not appear everywhere in one common form. It presents itself in different phases at different places. There are many dialects of it,—as many, perhaps, as the number of syllables in which it is spoken. It requires a generally recognised and permanent character to be impressed upon it. In this matter, the State has made a good beginning. It now remains for public-spirited Hindi-speaking Natives to come forward, and earnestly do their part.

In the beginning of my labours, not having Shakespear's valuable Anglo-Hindustání dictionary in my possession, I adopted Dr. Forbes's explanation and orthography in Urdú ; but, subsequently, when I obtained Shakespear's dictionary, I gladly followed it in general. In cases in which usage is divided, sometimes both forms of pronunciation have been exhibited, sometimes one particular form has been preferred.

In Sanskrit words, the final a has been often omitted in compliance with the wishes of the Publisher, who thought that the omission, however repugnant to Sanskrit propriety, would suit the taste of the public better than the retention.

Phrases do not necessarily form a part of the plan of the Work. They would have, doubtless, greatly enhanced its value. But their insertion would have deferred its completion to a very remote day, and made it too bulky and expensive for those for whom it is principally intended. To increase the utility of the Work, the Publisher has very judiciously added to it abbreviations used in writing and printing, and a dictionary of quotations.

I repeat that I have derived considerable aid from Webster and Worcester. I have occasionally consulted Dr. Richardson and Smart. I have largely availed myself of the dictionaries of D'Rozario, Shakespear, Forbes, and Monier Williams. I must acknowledge that, in the absence of the valuable work of the last-mentioned author, my speed would have been considerably retarded.

I must not omit to own that I have adopted some renderings of scientific terms from the 'Synopsis of Science in Sanskrit and English' by the late Dr. James Robert Ballantyne*, a name that I cannot mention without feelings of profound veneration and sorrow!

I hope it is not too much to say that for terms of ordinary occurrence, the present Work, in its own peculiar sphere, concentrates in itself the utility of the dictionaries of Webster, Richardson, Smart, Worcester, D'Rozario, Shakespear, Forbes, and Monier Williams.

I have incessantly laboured hard for years at this Work. My motive has been no other than to serve the public with my mite. I have abjured all pecuniary profit from the sale. I hope the public will not be disappointed. During my progress, proof-sheets were forwarded to competent judges in different quarters. Their verdict was, I feel happy to state, encouraging. But to satisfy all parties, in all respects, is a moral impossibility. To expect perfection in a human work is to expect infallibility in man. That, therefore, there are numerous faults and omissions in the execution of this Work, no one can know better than myself. I have simply toiled as a pioneer in the march of intellect, and if I succeed in removing even a single stone from the path of the Student, I shall consider my labours as amply repaid.

Now remains the grateful task of publicly thanking those that deserve my thanks. My best and warmest acknowledgments, then, are due to Dr. E. J. Lazarus, the Printer and Publisher, who has spared neither expense nor pains on his part to make the Work worthy of the public ; to R. T. H. Griffith Esquire, M. A., Oxon., † in whom I found an obliging and willing Tutor, ever ready to assist me in rightly apprehending the true import of a word, when my principal guides, Webster and Worcester, failed me ; to the distinguished Paṇḍit Bāpú Deva, the accomplished Viṭṭhal Śāstrī, and the courteous Paṇḍit Sītala Prasāda Tiwārī, ‡ for the occasional aid they cheerfully afforded me in their respective departments of mathematics, philosophy, and belles-lettres ; to the Maulavī Hamīdu-d-dīn Ahmad, and Muhammad Ali, ¶ who readily attended to me, whenever I troubled them with questions legitimately falling within their province ; and to Bābús Durgā Prasāda and Keśava Kcole, || at one time my pupils, and, at present, my fellow-labourers, for their untiring diligence and inexhaustible patience in revising, with me, the proof-sheets as they passed through the press. To all these gentlemen, I gratefully acknowledge my obligations.

The last, though not the least, individual, to whom I feel bound to pay my tribute of gratitude is my esteemed pupil, Kuñwar Śambhu Nārāyaṇa Siṅha, son of H. H. the Rājā Deva Nārāyaṇa Siṅha Bahādur, of Saidpur Bhitri. To ensure all practicable typographical accuracy in a work of public utility, this young Nobleman, actuated by a feeling of pure benevolence, volunteered his kind aid in revising the proof-sheets with others. A moment's inspection of the accentuation and syllabication of the words in this Volume will indicate the amount of labour he willingly imposed upon himself, and steadily underwent to the end. May he live long, and prove a worthy son of a worthy father !

TABLE OF CHANGES WHICH LETTERS UNDERGO IN DERIVATION.

VOWELS.

Any vowel or diphthong may be substituted for another: the following are the changes which most frequently occur:—

A is changed into e, i, o, u, ei, ie.

E is changed into a, i, o, u, ai, ie, oa, oe, oo.

I is changed into a, o, u, y, ai, ei.

O is changed into a, e, i, u, ea, eu, ey, oe, oi, ou, ui.

U is changed into a, e, i, o, y, au, ee, eu, ie, oi, ou.

Y is changed into ie.

Ae is changed into ai; ai into ae, oe; au into o, ou; oi into oe, e; ou into u.

CONSONANTS.

Consonants, which are pronounced by the same organs of speech, are transmutable; namely,— Labials, b, f, p, ph, v, w.

Dentals, d, t, th, s, z, c soft.

Palatials, c hard, g hard, ch hard, k, q.

Liquids, l, m, n, r.

The following consonants are also transmutable; b, v, g soft; d, g soft, j; s, z, u; sc, sh; x, z.

The letters e, h, s, are sometimes prefixed; b, d, g, inserted.

ERRATA.

The following Corrections, up to page 415, have been gone over very carefully. It is probable that all the copies have not all the orthographical errors given in the list below, as the diacritical marks occasionally break off after many copies have been printed. In those cases in which the letter i has no dot, it may be taken for granted that it should be read as an i.

MATHURÁ PRASÁD MÍSŔ'S TRILINGUAL DICTIONARY.

The English word, with its meaning in English, is given first, then the Urdú, and lastly the Hindi. To separate the languages, a dash (—) is placed between each, and the Urdú is given in Italics. But as Urdú contains a large number of Hindi terms, mingled with derivatives from Arabic and Persian, many words in Italics are Hindi, though current in Urdú likewise. These are distinguished by a small h ("h") affixed, and, to economize space, are not repeated among the Hindi meanings, though understood as belonging to them as well as to the Urdú.

Ā, the first letter of the alphabet, the indefinite article placed before words beginning with the sound of a consonant; before words beginning with the sound of a vowel, it is written an; as a prefix to many English words, it is equivalent to the preposition in, or on, as asleep, abed—Āngrezi hurūf-i-tahajji kā pahlā harf ā hai; jin lafzōn ke shurū meñ harf-i-sahih kī āwāz hotī hai unke pahle yah harf-i-tankir likhā jātā hai, aur jin lafzōn ke shurū meñ harf-i-illat kī āwāz hotī hai unke pahle ā kī jagah meñ an lāyā jātā hai; jab lafzōn ke shurū meñ ā hotā hai tab iske ma'ne meñ yā par hote hain, jaisā kī asleep, āram meñ, abed, bichhaune par—Āngrezi vāpamālā kā pratham akshar ā hai; jin śabdoñ ke ādi meñ vyanjan ki dhvani nikaltī hai unse pūr yah auśchāyak likhā jātā hai, aur jin śabdoñ ke ādi meñ swar ki dhvani nikaltī hai unse pūr ā ke sthān meñ an hotā hai; jab śabdoñ ke ādi meñ ā hotā hai, tab iskā arth meñ wā par hotā hai, jaisā kī asleep, nīnd meñ, abed, bichhaune par.
